When a psychic told Eve her son's life was in danger and her spirit guide was trying to warn her, Eve knew she had to find a way to open the channels of communication. "Before talking to any spirit, be sure to surround yourself with a protective white light," the psychic warned. "Ask the spirit to identify himself as being of the light. He can't claim to be of the light if he isn't." That night Eve fashioned a pendulum and an alphabet arc, and surrounded herself with an imaginary white light before speaking to the air: "If there's a spirit of light who wants to talk to me about my son, please swing the pendulum over the letters to spell out your message." Immediately the pendulum began to swing, spelling out the message: "My name is Gideon. I'm of the light. I am your guardian angel." This began a seven year relationship between Eve and her "guardian angel." It wasn't until he told her they'd been wed in a prior life that Eve understood the physical stirring she felt when he talked to her of love. Betrayed is a true story, based on events from the author's life.
