“A sad story worth reading again and again.”

Description:

It is a real life story of a beautiful young princess, Mishaal, from Jeddah, Saudi Arabia who was forced to marry an old nobleman but fell in love with a handsome Jewish boy her own age and secretly bore his child. She had been on the run from the clutches of her husband, who vowed to execute her for adultery. She was convinced that she would be flogged or stoned to death if deported to Saudi Arabia. She had narrated her story near the Home Office at Wellesley road, Croydon.

Stephnie Atwood found out the true story behind the princess's sad tale of an unsuccessful marriage, an incomplete love story and the struggle to safely bring up her love child.

An insight of horrific ordeal of women in Saudi Arabia. And the royals are not spared either.

Names have been changed and various events slightly altered to protect the well-being of recognizable individuals.

The author is not against any religion or any government or any individual in the world. She does not wish to degrade Saudi nationals nor she has any intention to give Islam a bad name.
